

A system and method for remotely controlling a software application and, where applicable, a hardware or software device attached to the host computer. An internet connection native to the application is established between a host and one or more remote computers running the same software application. This connection enables a remote viewer to view and control the host user's application via the application's graphical user interface. The host user retains control of the application at all times.